My experiences as a CNC \ Electronics technician included plant wide support for quick diagnosis and repair of all shop CNC (Computerized Numeric Controllers), electronics, and facility support equipment such as boilers, chillers, and waste water treatment.

- Working with outside contractors on PMs and scheduled repair.
- Supporting plant equipment on a 24/7 maintenance call-in rotation.
- Working with production engineers to rectify machining problems by applying technical and analytical skills into the diagnosis.
- Retrofitting new peripherals to existing equipment to handle the demands of workloads and the engineering changes of production parts.
- Using research techniques to find quality replacement parts for equipment to ensure longevity and reliability.
- Troubleshooting and diagnosing CNC and PLC equipment with linear and rotary feedback systems.
- Communicating the status of machine repairs with operation managers.
- Scheduling downtime for preventive maintenance.
- Assembling and leading project teams.
- Performing retrofits.
- Programming PLCs and conveyor drive systems.
- Installing data communication systems for plant equipment.
- Performing time studies on production lines and offering technical suggestions for cycle time improvements.
- Assisting contractors in work completion and ensuring work was completed within company expectations.
- Train maintenance technicians in troubleshooting and repairing electronics.

Texas A&M-Commerce, Teaching Assistant, 2006 to 2009. English 101 College Reading and Writing. English 102 Written Argument and Research. The English 101 consisted of sequenced writing-- meaning, students read and responded to five different essays based on one theme. The goals of the course are: to situate students among the scholarship on a given topic to help them become conversant (in what others say), to evaluate the contents to help with analytical skills, and to engage in critical thinking that elicited thoughtful responses that contribute to the discourse (what they have to say). English 102 entailed students developing research skills through an ethnographic essay by engaging in scholarship through different cultural lenses and personal experiences. Texas A&M-Commerce, Graduate Assistant, Non-Teaching 2005-200, English 110 Reading and English 100 Basic Writing Group. I conducted English 110 and 100 labs that augmented the basic courses that are designed to help students manage the complexities of writing. Paris Junior College/Sulphur Springs Campus Summer II Developmental Writing 0302 and Composition and Rhetoric 1301.

Related Experience

During my time at Texas A&M-Commerce I worked in the Communication Skills Center as a tutor. Although grammar is an important constituent in writing effective academic papers, the philosophy of the writing center focused on higher order concerns such as students constructing insightful papers that include a focused thesis supported by logically flowing paragraphs with the end goal of writing something of value. In addition, students were encouraged to write as if they are contributing to the scholarship on a given topic and to see themselves as writers. My job was to ensure, in a non-directive capacity concerning writing, that students clearly articulate their ideas and to recognize whether they have done so. In the area of reading and comprehension, by asking probative questions (depending on contexts), I helped students evaluate and make judgments on texts in order for them to provide rationales for their judgments; of course this also applied to writing.

Significant Professional Publications

I have not published work in peer-reviewed journals, magazines, or other academic sources; however, I have participated in conferences. In the fall of 2006 I presented a paper at EGAD, DaVinci to Derrida: Breaking Codes Across Disciplines at Texas A&M-Commerce. My paper is entitled "Mythological Themes in Neal Stephenson's The Diamond Age: Tricksters, Hackers, and Cybernetic Crackers." I later changed the direction of this paper toward memetics, narratology and gender constructions, post-humanism, nanotechnology, and fairy tales for my 595 Master's paper entitled "Real Time Fairy Tales: Assembling Subjectivity In Neal Stephenson's Diamond Age." In the fall of 2007 I presented for EGAD (RE) Presenting Genres: Shaping Minds Through Literature and Composition at Texas A&M-Commerce. The title of my paper is "Consumerism: The New Libido In M.T. Anderson's Novel Feed."
